[HOWARD L. BINGHAM]

has taken more than a million photographs of Muhammad Ali, his best friend and associate, over a period of 40 years. His portfolio includes Martin Luther King Jr., Malcolm X, the Black Panthers, the Beatles, the Dalai Lama, Nelson Mandela, and The Jackson Five, to name a few. His works have been published in Time, Sports Illustrated, Look, People, Newsweek and Ebony.

Through his long-time friendship with Bill Cosby, Bingham became the family photographer. According to Cosby, Bingham has no particular technique, but he loves what he does, and what makes him unique is recognizing people's idiosyncrasies.

He received the "Photography of the Year Award" in 1997 from the American Society of Photographers, and more recently, Kodak has created the Kodak/Bingham scholarship at Rochester Institute of Technology.

A long life of pursuing social justice and equality on Ali's side led Bingham to try to make a difference himself. He has taught to inner city kids, instructing them in the importance of education. "I go there and I talk to the kids, I try to motivate them."

In addition to being the Executive Producer on the movie Ali, Bingham has worked on several photography books, among them Muhammad Ali, A Thirty-Year Journey and GOAT, A Tribute to Muhammad Ali. GOAT is a limited edition memorabilia tome of 800 pages, weighing 75 pounds.

Bingham has quietly recorded many years of vibrant political events, magnificent sport achievements, and radical social transformations that forged and changed forever the history of this country. Despite his less than fortuitous beginnings, Bingham has managed to challenge every possible obstacle with tenacity and persistence. With photographs, films, books, and exhibitions, Howard L. Bingham resurfaces into the spot-light with visionary and insightful projects, to the delight of both novices and long time followers.
